HUNTER OF BIG GAME
SEES JUNGLE ON SHIP

Englishman on Way to South America Shoots Imaginary Animals in Cabin.

Lionel Cunningham, an Englishman of 26, whose parents are well-to-do, boarded the Royal Mail liner Orizaba at Southampton to go to Colon, where he intended to proceed to Colombia to hunt big game. He was equipped with a rifle, a shotgun, two big revolvers and a bowie knife with an eighteen-inch blade. He had also a stock of liquors. The Orizaba arrived here yesterday by way of the West Indies, with most of the purser's unofficial log filled with tales of the Englishman's doings on the voyage from Southampton to Colon, which gave the impression that the hunter thought he was already in the South American jungles.

About 4 o'clock in the morning, two days before the Orizaba reached Colon, those of the ship's company whose berths were in the neighborhood of Cunningham's heard two shots in his cabin. The Englishman fell into the corridor on his face. He had a revolver in his right hand and the bowie knife in his left. As he fell the knife pierced his chest, but he was only slightly hurt. Dr. H. Morton, the ship's surgeon, dressed the wound. He also administered an antidote for visions, as Cunningham had seen some things in his room and it was at them he shot, the bullets making holes in the door.

Dr. Morton thought it unlikely that Cunningham would be in fit condition to make his projected hunting trip, and there is an impression among the Orizaba's officers that they will have to take him on board again on the return trip to Southampton.

He and his family arrived from New York on May 24. The manager of the hotel said Mr. Kohler was ill when he arrived here. He had suffered from rheumatism aboard the steamer on the way across. He took to bed at once and gradually was never up afterward. He was attended by the best physicians, including Dr. Landouzy. They were fearful of the rheumatism reaching the heart, especially since last Sunday, and this finally occurred this afternoon.

His wife and three daughters will accompany the body to New York on the Lorraine.

Charles Kohler was a wealthy piano manufacturer who began to take an active interest in racing affairs three years ago. When the famous racehorse Uncle Fred died, he bought the horse and sold it to S. C. Hildreth, broke down Mr. Kohler bought him and also purchased Ramapo Farm in New Jersey. Uncle was sent to this breeding establishment and was mated to a number of mares last Sunday. He was at one time being two-year-olds which have been racing here in Mr. Kohler's interests.

In addition to his plan to breed horses in this country, Mr. Kohler proceeded to buy a considerable stable to be raced in France and England when the New York tracks had been closed.

Mr. Kohler lately became heavily interested in the Saratoga track. He bought up many shares of stock and became a power in racing in this State.

The first news of Mr. Kohler's death was received by his trainer, J. L. Leary, at Belmont Park yesterday. "The death of Mr. Kohler is a heavy blow to the turf," said August Belmont. "He worked hard to bring back the sport and was a big help to us. The establishment of a breeding farm in New Jersey was a bold move and also a benefit. Racing men mourn his loss."
